Question 2B (20 marks)

Read the following passage.

The Fisherman and his Wife

There was once a poor fisherman who lived with his wife in a hut by the sea. Everyday he went fishing in his boat. One day, he caught a huge fish, which begged not to be killed.

"I am a magical fish," it said. "I wouldn't taste nice at all. Put me back in the water."

The fisherman was extremely surprised when he heard the fish talking to him. He thought it would be wrong to kill it and therefore agreed to let it go. However, when he came home empty handed, his wife scolded him.

"Haven't you caught anything today? What kind of fisherman are you?" she shouted.

"I did catch a fish," the fisherman said, "but it was a magical one and I let it go back."

When she heard this, the fisherman's wife became even more angry.

"And you did not ask for a reward? Go back, you fool and ask for a house!"

The fisherman went out to sea again and called the magical fish. When the latter appeared, the fisherman said that his wife wanted a new house in return for saving its life. When the fisherman went home he found his wife in a beautiful house.

But the wife wasn't satisfied. She asked her husband to go back and ask for an even bigger house. The fisherman went out to sea one more time, and came back to see his wife in a very big house.

But still the wife was not satisfied. "Go back and ask for a castle," she ordered. When the fisherman got home this time, he saw a very big castle. His wife was surrounded by guards and servants. "Surely you are happy now, wife?" he asked.

She thought for a while and then said: "No. I want to be the richest person on Earth."

The fisherman went back to the magical fish with a heavy heart. "She wants to be the richest person on Earth," he told the fish.

When he returned home this time, he found his wife crying loudly - back in their poor old hut!
